

Manage Your Career

Free Resources. Awards of Excellence. Announcing E-book Launch.

Please be sure to add newleafresumes@gmail.com to your address book or friends' list.

You are receiving this newsletter because you are a past client, or because you signed up for a subscription. For those who are no longer interested, you will find the unsubscribe option at the bottom of the email. I thank you for allowing me to share ideas and info, and wish you all the best in your career!

In this issue:

- NLR has lots of info to share, and it's free for the asking!
- NLR won its 4th Award

Free for the Asking

I'm as curious as a cat (and yes, I'm well aware that that can be dangerous!). Reading and researching, mulling things over, and having good conversations that delve into a great variety of topics are all things that make me happy.

Oftentimes, while driving, I remark to my husband that we should get a laptop equipped with satellite internet so that I can google topics as we drive. (Don't worry, he's driving, otherwise curiosity really would kill the cat!)

But that innate need to know can be of benefit to my past clients and subscribers. All that reading and researching has led me to write over 100 articles on many aspects of the job hunt. Each time a client mentions something or emails with a question, I have a topic for a new article. I use some of the articles for my weekly Waterloo Region Record article (Careers Weekly in Friday's paper); some I post on EzineArticles.com; and some are written by request, expressly for organizations' newsletters.

Here are a few of the topics on which I've written. I encourage you to write and see if I've written on a topic that you are interested in. If you are happily employed, you might consider your family, colleagues, friends or neighbours. These are free for the asking.

- Perhaps an article for your friend who is down in the dumps about looking for work; I have an upbeat article on keeping that momentum going.
- Or for your neighbour who fears interviews as he doesn't know how to explain the fact that he was let go in his last job; I have an insightful article on how to position, with ideas borrowed from public relations, a truthful yet strategic reply.
- Or for that soon-to-be new grad in your family who mentioned attending a job fair; I have a series of three articles on how to prepare, how to "work it," and how to follow-up, networking-style, after the job fair.
- Or for your sister who is returning to work after several years of mat leave; I have an incredible article on tackling that transition.

News to Share

Press Release

New Leaf Resumes is an Award-winner

September 21, 2010

New Leaf Resumes is proud to announce that it has been recognized by industry leaders and peers for its professional resumes with an Award of Excellence. Conferred by Career Professionals of Canada, and adjudicated by experts such as representatives of Deloitte, Toronto, and TorontoJobs.ca, the annual awards recognize Canada's top career professionals.

And it is not New Leaf Resumes' first award.

This award marks the fourth of New Leaf Resumes' best-in-category resume awards. "It's wonderful to be recognized for excellence in writing effective resumes," says New Leaf Resumes' owner and principal writer, Stephanie Clark.

Clark went on to say, "As well as being passionate about writing and strategizing professional resumes, I'm committed to ongoing professional development. I want to make sure that I effectively support my clients' career goals. "

In the next few weeks, you will receive an additional email, announcing the launch of New Leaf's first-ever e-book, titled: Interview Strategies That Work. Look for it!

As always, your comments, insights, news and questions are valued and welcome. For now then, Stephanie Clark www.newleafresumes.ca www.newleafresumes.com newleafresumes@gmail.com